Physician Documentation - No Acute Distress

Dave Chauvin, DO, FACEP
Executive Vice President Reimbursement
dchauvin@premierdocs.com

Lisa Hohler, CPC
Physician Documentation Coordinator
lhohler@premierdocs.com

To physicians, “No Acute Distress” means that your patient will probably not become unstable in the next 5 minutes. But to payors it means something completely different. In a recent audit, the reviewers concluded that when the emergency physician documented “no acute distress” the code assigned should be much lower than the service that was provided.

Documenting “no acute distress” in your general appearance section of your exam may seem appropriate and communicates to other physicians about the condition of your patient. However, reviewers looking for any reason to downcode your chart frequently jump on this term to justify a much lower service than what the physician provided. The term “NAD” is also facilitated by templated charts or computerized Macros that may actually prompt you to document NAD.

Under your General Appearance section, use this as an opportunity to describe your patient.

Examples

“Confused 85 year old male, nontoxic does not appear to be in pain.”

“Well hydrated 2 year old running around in the room with good social smile.”

Other terms to avoid…

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Term</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Normal cephalic</td>
<td>When was the last time you saw someone that was not?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See nursing notes</td>
<td>No one really cares. Rather, document that you reviewed and agree with the nursing notes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See medication list</td>
<td>No one really cares. Rather, document that you reviewed the medication list.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Noncontributory</td>
<td>Confusing term… what exactly is noncontributory?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Negative</td>
<td>What was negative?</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Visited 10/26/2015

Remember for those sites using Templated charts, please avoid checking the “NAD” box.

© 2014 Premier Physician Services