Dear Prof. Wozniak,

It's been nearly five years since I graduated the GE undergrad program at UofI, and I've found myself often thinking back on my years there. Like most engineering graduates, I've realized that I never use 90% of what I learned in lecture. The biggest lessons were the ones learned outside the classroom, and it's here that I owe you a tremendous debt of gratitude.

I didn't realize it at the time, but watching you battle with the department taught me a valuable lesson about conscience and honor. I've forgotten everything I ever learned about control systems, but I'll always remember my first lesson in professional ethics, and for that I am eternally grateful. It's taken me a long time to thank you, but always remember that you were an inspiration and example to at least this one student.

Sincerely
